National Bat & Moth Night 15th May 2010 7.30pm

Bats and moths share a close, though perhaps rather one-sided relationship. As predator and prey they have evolved closely. Bats are able to navigate using a sophisticated sonar system called echolocation. Sound waves are emitted by bats and detected as they bounce back from objects or potential prey, creating a detailed 'picture' of the bat's environment, which is essential in navigation and hunting for prey.

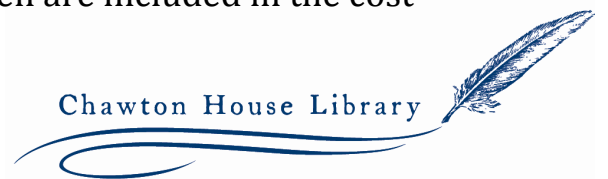

Take part in the UK's annual national celebration of these wonderful nocturnal creatures, at Chawton House. Find out more about these amazing creatures with a talk and guided walk of the grounds. Assist with the set up and use of the bat and moth detection equipment (stout footwear required).

Refreshments and a Soup Supper in the Old Kitchen are included in the cost of the night.

Tickets £10, pre-booking is essential.
